INTRODUCTION

The Asean University Network establishment in November 1995 was the idea of the 4th ASEAN Summit 1992 which urged the ASEAN member countries to assist in speeding up the harmonization and enhancement of the regional identity by encouraging human resource development to further strengthening the current network of the leading universities and higher learning institutions in the region. Currently, the AUN which has 30 universities from the ten countries of ASEAN region becomes an organization which can be a strategic partner in expanding the quality assurance network with the famous universities in this region.

The primary strategy focus of AUN is to develop ASEAN regional network in the area of higher learning by ensuring a sharing of learning program, expertise, research field, and academic resources through the involvement of at least one representative from the member countries in every specified area of the main strategy.

The AUN Secretariat functions as a coordinating and monitoring body. Its primary functions are planning, managing, coordinating, monitoring, and evaluating the programs and activities of the AUN. The other tasks of the Secretariat are to include developing ideas, innovation, and proposals for the AUN cooperation and building plan and mechanism for supplying and generating fund in respect of the AUN operation. The AUN Secretariat is based at the Chulalongkorn University in Bangkok, Thailand, and works in close collaboration with the ASEAN Secretariat in coordinating and implementing the regional cooperation activities in higher education.

The organizing of the AUN Quality Assurance International Conference is one of the main activities of the AUN in developing and promoting the AUN to its current members and potentials. The conference will also provide greater insight to participants on the direction of higher education in the ASEAN region as well as the importance of ensuring the quality of teaching and learning at universities. Other organized activities are such as capacity development training by the qualified evaluators, building a strategic network with the concerned parties and collaborating with partners who have the same directions and visions.

CONFERENCE OBJECTIVE

1. To strengthen the ability of the internal and external quality assurance through dialogue and training activities for the ASEAN quality assurance professionals based on the regional standards.
2. To enhance the higher education system through the equal recognition and harmonization of quality development policy as well as to create trust between the universities and sharing of good practice in the field of quality assurance.
3. To provide input to higher education institutions in obtaining information that is more relevant and strategic in enhancing the competitiveness of national and regional economies.
